Killed his Own Hens.

Old Col. Higgins owned a flock of han which he was very careful to keep shut up during the platting season, and his wife would let them out occasionly to enjoy themselves in the garden. The Colonel seeing them in the garden one day, supeighbor; and greatly enraged at the des truction of his property, he seized his old musket and blazed away at them, and sent bor's house, with a message couched in language rather more furnible than polite. The next day the operation was repeated, and so on for several days, and the Colonel was greatly astonished at his neighbor allence and good nature, as he never sent lack any more than very polite thanks for the "gift," as he expressed it.
